

A photograph of organist Gail Archer, a woman with short grey hair and glasses, smiling and leaning over an organ console. She is wearing a dark grey blazer over a dark top and a bright blue beaded necklace. The organ console is made of dark wood and features numerous wooden stop tabs. In the background, the interior of a church is visible, with wooden pews, a large stained glass window, and organ pipes.

“She played with a bracing physicality in the work’s more driven passages and endowed humbler ruminations with a sense of vulnerability and awe.” - The New York Times
